

BuilderMT's Workflow and Digital Document-Management Systems Cut "Windshield Time," Save Gas

High Price of Gas Is One More Reason to Automate and Digitize the Home Building Process

Lakewood, Colorado — May 12, 2011 — BuilderMT, North America's best-selling construction workflow software solution provider, recently discovered another advantage to its software: It saves customers meaningful amounts of windshield time...and gas. Through the use of workflow automation software, a builder with ten trucks on the road, each getting 14 MPG, could easily save $1,000 per month on reduced fuel costs, to say nothing of the labor savings from digital scheduling and e-document exchanges. One builder that BuilderMT recently interviewed requires three of its superintendents to travel 45 minutes each way, three times a week, just to review variance purchase orders that could be easily reviewed online or on mobile devices. What's the cost to that builder? Over $1,500 per week ($78,000 per year) in unproductive labor time, not to mention time lost to building cycle-time with the superintendent off-site.

"What's remarkable about that waste of time, money and gas is how easy it is for builders to fix," said Tom Gebes, BuilderMT's president. "By offering enterprise access to BuilderMT's solutions over the web (or on iPads and through mobile devices) at a very affordable price, with quick ROIs, our builders have saved thousands of dollars a month. These savings are not just for one or two months. They carry over and compound in value for every year they use the technology."
